

Parador de La Gomera

The Parador:

The spectacular volcanic island of La Gomera is the second smallest of the Canary Islands, and was Christopher Columbus's last port of call before he sailed for America. The central peak of Garajonay, surrounded by lush subtropical vegetation, rises to nearly 1500 m, and is both a National Park and a UNESCO World Heritage Site. The inhabitants of La Gomera traditionally communicated with each other across the island's many valleys by a unique language of whistles – a language that is now taught in all the island's schools.

Primary Facilities:

- Lift
- Parking (chargeable)
- Gardens
- Swimming Pool

Key Activities:

- Garajonay National Park
- "Los Organos" volcanic cliffs
- Casa de Colón (Columbus' House)

Keytel Tips:

- The best way to experience all that La Gomera has to offer is on foot, and there are plenty of guided walking tours and paths for visitors to explore the island.
- For those who prefer the sea, boat trips are another way to discover the spectacular natural beauty of the island.

Directions

Arriving by car:

The Parador de La Gomera is located in the east of the island, close to the port of San Sebastian de La Gomera. It is just off the main road which links the port to the town. Driving towards the port it is raised up on the left hand side. The island can be reached by plane or ferry. The ferries run from Los Cristianos in Tenerife, El Hierro and La Palma to San Sebastian de La Gomera. By plane there are flights from both Tenerife and Gran Canaria operated by Binter Canarias which fly into the airport at Playa de Santiago 30km away in the south of the island. There is a local bus which runs between Playa de Santiago and San Sebastian.

Nearest airport: La Gomera Airport (30km)
